

TAMARA PARGÄTZI

From a young age, I have been fascinated by the human body and how it works. After completing my high school diploma, I stumbled upon osteopathy by chance. I found the combination of medicine, manual therapy, and the contact with people very interesting, which led me to choose this field of study.

After completing a five-year full-time training in Lausanne from 2009 to 2014, I gained valuable practical experience during my assistantship. I successfully passed the GDK exam after three years in the fall of 2017 and then decided to become self-employed with Osteopathie Pizol.

I met Dr. Roy Bösiger during an internship in my studies, and when he moved his practice to Floraweg, the opportunity for collaboration arose. What I find particularly interesting about Dr. Bösiger's concept is the regular exchange between therapists with different medical backgrounds, from which both I and my patients can benefit.

For more information about my services and application areas, please visit:

www.osteopathie-pizol.ch

